NJLINCS Advisory

Public Health Advisory: Healthcare Preparedness and Surveillance for FIFA Club World Cup Events (June 15th - July 13th) in New Jersey

Key Points:

1. Be Vigilant for Travel-Related and Unusual Illnesses: While no specific health threat exists for this event, with the expected influx of domestic and international visitors, healthcare providers should maintain heightened awareness for travel-related illnesses, potential outbreaks, and any unusual clinical presentations that could indicate exposure to immediately reportable biological agents.
2. Review Disease Reporting Procedures: Promptly report diseases to public health authorities and highlight any potential links to attendance at a Club World Cup event.
3. Ensure Preparedness: Review and update your facility's emergency response and preparedness plans, coordinate with state and local partners and maintain situational awareness.

The NJHCC EM Team has established a greater working relationship with the New Jersey State Police (NJSP) Training Unit. We are seeking to better understand what kinds of training you and your teams are looking for, examples include but are not limited to: ICS 100, 200, 300, 400, HSEEP, etc.

If there is sufficient interest (10~ responses) in a specific training or several trainings, the NJHCC EM Team will work with the NJSP Training Unit to attempt to establish a regional training opportunity with a closed registration for NJHCC members.

Please note: A training request cannot always be approved due to logistical, staffing, timing, etc. challenges on the part of the facilitating agencies. With that in mind, we will make every effort to get the training request approved and on the facilitated.

As FEMA Shrinks, a Grassroots Disaster Response Is Taking Shape

(New York Times)

They were just drills, but each felt urgent and real. A group of volunteers searched a wooded area for someone who had been injured and stranded, ready to provide aid. Then they practiced a river rescue, attaching a rope near the bank to help pull the victim to shore.

This was Rescue HQ, a gathering in rural Tennessee last month where the founding members of several newly formed disaster response groups ran through emergency scenarios and discussed how to better coordinate in the chaotic aftermath of a storm or a flood.

Groups like this are growing in number — a new model of disaster response taking shape outside of government channels. Many volunteers are deeply religious and have military backgrounds.

They're an unequal match for what the government can do, especially when it comes to long-term rebuilding efforts after natural disasters. But with the Trump administration pulling back staffing and funding for the Federal Emergency Management Agency — and even pledging to eliminate it — communities may soon rely far more on volunteer help.

"The bigger the gap is in terms of what the government isn't doing, the more we're going to expect from nonprofits and the larger their role is going to be," said Daniel Sledge, a professor at the University of Oklahoma who has studied disaster relief. "Whether nonprofits actually have the capacity or the ability to step in and fill in the gaps that, in all likelihood, we're going to be creating is a completely different question."
